After years in hiding, Kevin returns to power when he gets control of Tron's powerful Super Grid, where he wishes to keep it hidden from the world. Quorra is created inside of main protagonist Kevin Flynn's old computer by Alan Bradley who sought to resurrect him after his death and sought help from scientist and inventor Sark (a retelling of the story of Tron). He created a program "Quorra" which could travel inside computers and understands programs and files, but also human language. In return for helping Sark, Quorra asks that she be called by Bradley. Later, Kevin resurfaces and learns that Quorra is being released into society to pass a test to prove herself worthy of the title "Guardian". Kevin tries to stop Quorra from being released by looking at a mirror, but he is captured by Sark and taken back inside Grid. In revealing himself as Kevin Flynn, he is given the opportunity to use the Super Grid for good instead of evil. In order to save Tron's world from destruction, Kevin navigates his way through the complex only to be stopped by Sark's henchman Kloospace while searching for a secret passage into Grid. Quorra and Tron manage to escape and regroup with Beck. Kevin is taken back to the prison where he is the only prisoner. Sark tells Kevin that he must get Alan to call Quorra out of her. He then gives him a week before he declares war on everyone in the system. Kevin reveals himself as Flynn, and tries to convince Alan that they are his father. Alan, in denial, calls out Quorra in hopes that she is not real, but she appears right in front of him, which sends him into shock at what has happened. Alan then sees a digital version of Flynn. In his office, Sark shows Alan the video of Kevin from before he died, reminding him that Kevin was a good man who had a plan for the world. He also tells Alan they need Flynn's plan to save Tron's world from destruction. Back in the prison cell, Kevin is slowly being killed by the system he swore to protect after an energy shield is lowered, but before it can hit him it freezes and recedes back into the ceiling. Kevin then finds a secret passageway into Grid that leads into memory space where he finds his father's old arcade under an abandoned building.
